IN THE TENT, HIGH RANKING OFFICERS FROM BOTH SIDES WAITED... THEIR EYES ON MAJOR ENDON AS HE ENTERED! THEN, THEY WATCHED THE CHINESE AIR FORCE OFFICER TAKE HIS SEAT ON THE OPPOSITE SIDE OF THE TABLE...

ON THE AGENDA TODAY IS THE MATTER OF ATROCITIES COMMITTED BY MEMBERS OF THE U.S. AIR FORCE AGAINST THE CHINESE PEOPLE'S ARMY!

CAPTAIN KAI SHU IS THE PRINCIPAL WITNESS FOR THE PEOPLE'S ARMY! CAPTAIN SHU IS ONE OF THE FINE YOUNG MEN FIGHTING AGAINST AMERICAN IMPERIALISM IN THIS AREA WHERE THE AMERICANS HAVE NO RIGHT TO BE! CAPTAIN, YOU MAY BEGIN!

THE DAYS OF DUELING WITH SWORDS AND PISTOLS ARE PAST, CAPTAIN! BUT YOU'RE A FIGHTER PILOT, AND SO AM I! I'M CHALLENGING YOU RIGHT NOW TO MEET ME IN THE AIR AND FIGHT IT OUT!

NO! IT IS IMPOSSIBLE!

WHY NOT? THEY'RE BOTH PILOTS ASSIGNED TO PATROL IN THIS AREA!

UNLESS, GENERAL, YOU BELIEVE YOUR MAN TO BE INFERIOR OR YOUR RUSSIAN BUILT EQUIPMENT INFERIOR, I FAIL TO SEE WHY THE MAJOR'S PROPOSAL IS REJECTED!

THERE WAS NO ANSWER... THE MEETING, LIKE COUNTLESS OTHER PANMUNJOM MEETINGS, WAS TERMINATED WITHOUT RESULT... EXCEPT FOR THE CHINESE CHARGE CONCERNING AMERICAN USE OF GERM WARFARE...

GO BACK TO YOUR FIELD, MAJOR! FORGET WHAT YOU WERE ACCUSED OF!

VERY WELL, GENERAL!

BUT I'LL SURE HUNT FOR THAT CHINESE CAPTAIN WHEN I GET BACK IN THE AIR!

HON'LL YOU KNOW THE RIGHT COMMIE, MAJOR?

IN OTHER WORDS, WE'RE ALL ACCUSED OF GERM WARFARE! WHERE'D THEY GET THE PICTURE OF YOU, MAJOR?

I'VE GOT AN IDEA! WHEN WE GO UP TOMORROW, WE HUNT FOR THIS CAPTAIN KAI SHU AND THEN...

TAKE-OFF 0740 HOURS... MISSION DELIVER NAPALM BOMBS ON RED TROOPS IN STRONG POSITION ON RIDGE OVERLOOKING HIGHWAY...

OKAY, BOYS, OUR CHORE IS OUT OF THE WAY! NOW, WE GO HUNT CAPTAIN KAI SHU!

OUT OF THE MORNING SUN, DIVING STRAIGHT AT THE SUN-BLINDED PILOTS, A FLIGHT OF MIG 15'S ROARED. GUNS YAMMERING...

CAPTAIN KAI SHU HEARD... HE WAS ON THE AMERICAN FIGHTER FREQUENCY! SUDDENLY, HE JAMMED HIS THROTTLE FULL FORWARD AND ATTACKED...

I FIGURED YOU'D TRY ONE ATTACK AND THEN RUN FOR HOME! YOU WON'T MAKE IT THIS TIME!

THE FLYING BATTLESHIP

IT WAS 1942... APRIL... THE JAPS HAD TOO MANY SHIPS, TOO MANY MEN IN THE SOUTHWEST PACIFIC! SO AN AMERICAN PILOT AND HIS B-25 CREW DECIDED TO SINK SHIPS FOR A WHILE!

THE B-25 WITH THE HEAVY ARTILLERY IN THE NOSE WAS ONE OF THREE ESPECIALLY MODIFIED... THEY DID A TERRIFIC JOB AROUND NEW GUINEA!

IT WAS WEAPONS LIKE THAT... PLUS THE SKILL, IN-GENUITY, AND COURAGE OF THE MEN WHO USED THEM, THAT WON THE PACIFIC WAR FOR US!

THE DREAM OF FLIGHT

As early as the vision of the wonders of flight itself came premonitions of the inevitable horror that would surely follow the phenomenon. Even the early legends of India contain prophecies that in time there would be built "an aerial chariot with sides of iron and clad with wings which hurled down upon the city missiles that destroyed everything on which they fell."

During and following the ancient and medieval ages, men wrote boldly of flying but did little or no experimenting. Most of the theories during those centuries were naturally based on the flight of birds. Roger Bacon, of gunpowder fame, described in his writings an "instrument to fly withall so that one sitting in the midst of the instrument does turn an engine by which the wings, being artificially composed, may beat the ayre after the manner of a flying bird."

Leonardo da Vinci, another prophet of the future, conceived the parachute, "a domed roof of starched linen, 18 feet wide and 18 feet long," by means of which a man could "throw himself from any great height without fear or danger." Theoretical discussion of flying continued to increase during the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries until at last something practical in the way of flight was attempted.

On September 19, 1783, the Montgolfier brothers of Paris, France built the first successful hot air balloon. Their gas filled envelope was sent aloft with a sheep, a rooster and a duck as passengers before the assembled court of Louis XVI. Three days after all had returned in good shape; a brave individual named Jean Francois Pilatre de Rozier became the first human aerial passenger. He had hardly landed safely when M. de Vilette, a representative of the Journal de Paris, went aloft with de Rozier. While the newspapers made much of a Frenchman being the first human being to make an ascent, greatest emphasis was placed on pointing out the advantages the balloon would give to an army on land and to a navy on sea.

In short order, books were being hawked on the streets of cities close to France predicting that the French would descend upon them some still night with troops being transported by noiseless balloons. This psychological scare seemed to excite almost everyone about the possibility of the balloon in warfare except the French, who took it simply as a great national achievement and very little else.

A more important discovery took place across the channel in England in 1810 when Sir George Cayley built the world's first glider. It worked to the extent of successfully carrying a man in the air. The glider was a brilliant achievement in that it not only lifted a man in free flight and landed without killing the operator but also laid down the first sound aerodynamic principles upon which heavier-than-air machines are based.

For in order to be successful, Cayley had to master many complex problems that worked in direct opposition to each other. Such as cross-wind stresses, drag and the constant pull of gravity. Sir George patiently sought by experience just how things actually worked instead of going by mental calculations that were based for the most part on hypothesis. Like many others before him, he died thinking himself a failure. Whereas in reality he left a great contribution in his chosen field. He undoubtedly was the pioneer in the study and development of elementary aerodynamics.

Although Cayley had proved that a man-carrying-heavier-than-air machine could be kept aloft by air currents, practically all effort in this direction was dropped in favor of the balloon. The French Revolution gave it its greatest impetus and its first use as a military device. Scarcely a war followed in which the gas filled bags did not play a conspicuous part.

In this country a Professor Lowe organized the United States Army's aeronautical corps which saw much active service during the Civil War. The professor himself logged more than 3,000 ascents in captive balloons often staying aloft all day to observe the movements of the Confederate troops.

One of his companions on numerous ascents was a young German military attache, Col. Ferdinand von Zeppelin, who at the time was serving as observer for his government. He seemed to be more interested in the possibilities of the balloon in warfare than in the tactics employed by the opposing forces.

Its desperate position in the Franco-Prussian War caused France to authorize the formation by Feix Nadar of the "Ballon Poste" in order to float mail and passengers out of the besieged city of Paris. Later, the entire French Government used this method of escape when it seemed certain the city would be captured.

It was during the blockade of Paris that American citizens were first subjected to anti-aircraft fire. W. W. Reynolds, an agent for the Remington Arms Co. and C. W. Way, a New York merchant, were caught in the siege. They persuaded the authorities to build them a balloon, and on October 7, 1870, they ascended, accompanied by two French aeronauts.

The basket was heavily loaded, mostly with French gold in payment for armament sold to the Emperor Napoleon and failed to rise properly. As it drifted low towards the German lines, it was shelled by Prussian artillery, sniped at by infantry, and followed by troops of galloping horsemen. After several perilous escapes they were finally blown out of reach of their pursuers, and they landed safely beyond the Prussian lines in a field near Amiens.

With the development of a power source known as the gasoline engine, the construction of balloons made with longitudinal lattice framework followed. The name "dirigible" was given to this type of airship. The designers believed the day had at last arrived when a balloon could be guided by an outside power source to and from any destination and not be dependent on changeable currents of air for its motive power.

An airship of this type was devised by the French in 1897 but it was far from successful. Two years later Germany developed the first practical aircraft along these lines. Santos-Dumont, a Brazilian living in France, working on different principles from the German inventor also succeeded in constructing a successful lighter-than-air-ship.

The French Army, however, had other ideas concerning aircraft and paid little attention to the success of dirigibles. As early as 1891 it had commissioned Clement Ader, considered the foremost aeronautical enthusiast in France to build for the army its first military heavier-than-air plane. Ader, an electrical engineer by profession, was closely connected with the development of the telephone in France.

After selecting the bat as the best model to imitate, he started to build a craft similar in appearance to this creature, which he called the "Avion." It was provided with a 40 horsepower motor driving two propellers. The whole plan was kept in great secrecy. The French government even appropriated $100,000 for the founding of an arsenal to construct and subsequently arm a fleet of these planes.

But, alas, on October 14, 1897, after six years of hard work, the aircraft was completely wrecked in its initial attempt at flight. And the authorities refused to advance any more money. Sir Hiram Maxim, who originated the world's first successful machine gun, was approached by the British Government. It agreed to finance the building of a flying machine if he would design it.

He agreed to construct a large aircraft of the multiplane type with a wing spread of 120 feet. He provided it with 2 steam engines, each capable of generating 175 horsepower. The completed assembly weighed 7,000 pounds, but it too was wrecked on its first attempt to fly. The British Government then withdrew its support.

Ader and Maxim's efforts can best be summed up as serious efforts to fly but with no proved results. Maxim did contribute one thing to aviation. He argued successfully that an airplane, because it was intended to fly, did not necessarily have to flap its wings like a bird. As he stated, "If airplanes should be constructed like birds to be more efficient, then by the same token locomotives should be built like horses."

Samuel P. Langley was a great pioneer in American aviation who was continually harassed by bad fortune. He, in association with Charles E. Manly, built several contraptions called "Aerodromes." While they never managed to fly, present day authorities have judged them magnificent failures. That is, they were of sound construction and as advanced as it was possible to be at the time, especially in respect to motive power.

But it became the lot of two modest young men, Orville and Wilbur Wright, whose background consisted mainly in the building of bicycles, to fulfill the age old dream that had bested mankind from the earliest days to the twentieth century. For on December 17, 1903, their "contraption" made a halting erratic flight of 120 feet. And aviation, as we know it today, came to life.
